St. Leo Catholic Church welcomes the Hilton-Parma Community to an old-fashioned New England-Style "Publik Suppah". Classic bean suppers have been the anchor and heart of a centuries-old tradition that, legend has it, may have started with the Pilgrims who made baked beans and brown bread the night before, so as not to work on the Sabbath. Slow-baked with molasses and salt pork, the baked bean feature dish has become a Yankee favorite at community-spirited suppers long before "eat local" became an environmental buzz word and "community-building" became a core objective among folks seeking to mend the often raggedy threads of our social fabric.
